TEXT

JOINING A CHOIR HELPED ME COMBAT ANXIETY

Six years ago I started having panic attacks. I began to fight them with traditional tools, including therapy, keeping active, meditation and medication, all of which were a great help. Thankfully, a year later medication was no longer needed and neither was therapy. Problem solved.

Frustratingly, about a year after that, when I was apparently happy and healthy, I started to develop depression and began to have panic attacks again, and this time they were more debilitating. I tried my previous remedies, but I was still far from feeling well again.

Then I discovered a group called Sound, a pop, funk and soul choir. It meant a lot to me. I have been a member of the choir for three years. I practise every Tuesday. I love the community, the challenge, the performances and the fire it lights in my stomach.

My anxiety attacks came out of nowhere and, to this day, I still do not know what causes them. Now, however, I am feeling a lot better. When I am anxious, distraction is key and singing does exactly that for me. It sends me into autopilot, a state in which my body works with pure passion and joy. Don't get me wrong, there are weeks when the last thing I want to do after work is go to choir practice and I wish to go home to bed. But I go because I know I am guaranteed to come out feeling great.
